Education majors winners of contest

By TAD WALCH
Editor

Elementary education major Janine Mashburn and secondary education major Rex Hardy each won two free movie tickets Tuesday by tying for first in The Universe's NBA draft prediction contest.

Mashburn and Hardy bested 41 other entrants, each scoring 52 points. Mashburn correctly predicted 25 of the 27 players chosen ninth in the exact spot they were taken — in the first round of the NBA draft.

Hardy correctly predicted 22 of the 27 players chosen — 10 in the precise order they were selected.

Mashburn was surprised she would do so well. "I didn't think I had a chance," she said. "I thought a lot more people would be right on with their picks."

Mashburn, 25, a senior from Englewood, Colo., is a Golden State fan, but was disappointed with the Warriors' choice. "I wanted Shawn Bradley, but I guess Chris Webber will be a good addition to the team," she said.

Mashburn and her husband plan to take advantage of one irony by buying a Dallas Mavericks jersey with the name Mashburn on the back. Dallas — and Janine, of course — chose University of Kentucky forward Jamal Mashburn with the fourth pick of the draft. "We were happy with Jamal," Mashburn said.

At press time, it was not known if Hardy, 22, a junior from Moapa Valley, Nev., would buy an Orlando Magic jersey with Hardaway's name on the back.

festival not campaign trail

Parade regulations changed

By MATT FRANCK
Editor

Freedom Festival organizers' efforts to "de-politicize" the yearly July 4th parade has some City Council members crying foul.

"I think the changes will be a breath of fresh air for the city, as opposed to the hot air we had in years past," he said.

"We can't allow the parade to be muddled with political candidates and their 100 campaign workers throwing candy to get votes," he said.

Fudge said the changes were based on regulations existing at other national parades such as Salt Lake City's Days of '47 Parade and Pasadena's Rose Parade.

He says council members should understand that the Freedom Festival is one of the only parades in the nation that has allowed the type of free play which politicians have had in the past.

"If the council members decide not to participate, the only people they will be hurting is themselves," he said.

Council member Mark Hathaway says he agrees that past parades have been overly political, but feels the changes made this year overrule the problem.

"I admit I wouldn't want to sit out in the hot sun watching some guy trying to win votes, but the changes could have been made much more gradually," he said.

"If the council members decide not to participate, the only people they will be hurting is themselves," he said.

Council member Mark Hathaway says he agrees that past parades have been overly political, but feels the changes made this year overrule the problem.

"I admit I wouldn't want to sit out in the hot sun watching some guy trying to win votes, but the changes could have been made much more gradually," he said.

Hathaway says it is unfair to demand that the parade follow the same regulations as other parades, as it has always had a more informal tone.

He says before the announcement was made that he would be riding in the fire engine, he and other council members had arranged to ride in restored Corvettes.

Council chairman Dennis Hall says he will not let his personal differences with event organizers rain on the parade.

"I disagree with the way they want to box us in, but I respect the long hours they have donated to the parade and wouldn't want to spoil it," he said.

Hall said he is particularly disappointed that even Gov. Mike Leavitt will not be able to parade with his children because of the changes.

Fudge, however, defends the regulation barring politicians to be accompanied by their families. He says it may lead to a competition between office holders to try to show up with the biggest clan.

"It just wouldn't be fair to people like Rep. Orton, who is single, to be judged by spectators as not being a family man," he said.

Fudge said residents calling his office have been extremely supportive of the changes, and he is confident festivalgoers will not miss the display of political activity.

He says one woman called his office suggesting that the changes made by the festival organizers were, perhaps, not sufficient.

"I heard someone comment that instead of placing the council members on the fire engine, perhaps they should be forced to ride tricycles for the childish way they have been acting," he said.

The 1993 NBA draft, at Detroit's Palace of Auburn Hills, had such a mysterious flavor it could have been scripted by John Grisham. Before and after the top pick was announced Wednesday night, nothing seemed to be firm.

Orlando and Golden State made a private pre-draft arrangement, according to the Associated Press, ensuring that former BYU center Shawn Bradley would not be the No. 1 pick, like some observers thought he might be.

Warriors' coach Don Nelson decided a month ago he'd rather have Michigan's Chris Webber rather than Bradley, who is fresh off a two-year layoff from basketball after serving a mission.

Nelson, whose team had the third pick, smokescreened his intentions by publicly saying how much he wanted Bradley.

Orlando, meanwhile, coveted Memphis State's Anfernee Hardaway. So the deal called for Orlando to take Webber and hope Philadelphia, who owned the second pick, would select Bradley, and later deal Webber to Golden State, who was to take Hardaway.

The agreement culminated just minutes before the beginning of the draft.

Bob Ryan of the Boston Globe told ESPN that Bradley's family was assured Tuesday that Shawn would be a member of Golden State, but it never happened.

"It's the greatest subterfuge of Don Nelson's career," Ryan said. "That's the mystery we're trying to solve tonight."

After Bradley made his decision to leave BYU for the NBA, and after Orlando overcame unbelievable 66-1 odds in the lottery to land the No. 1 selection, what followed was weeks of speculation and rumors, mostly surrounding Bradley.

Would the Magic select the enigmatic 7-6 center and team him with Shaquille O'Neal? Or would they trade the pick to Golden State, desperately in need of an inside player?

The suspense seemingly ended when Orlando made Webber (of the erstwhile Fab Five) the first pick. Then, Philadelphia followed by picking Bradley (of the erstwhile Marvelous Mission) second. The Warriors took Hardaway third.

Thirty-five minutes after the draft began, Commissioner David Stern announced that Webber had been traded to Golden State for Hardaway and three future first-round picks. Had Philadelphia spoiled the proposed trade by taking Hardaway, Orlando would have kept the three picks, and the Warriors would have selected Bradley, the Associated Press reported.

It was thought Orlando would either trade its No. 1 pick to Golden State or take Bradley and trade him to the Warriors. Orlando would have had trouble remaining under the salary cap by taking the first pick two years in a row. O'Neal, the Rookie of the Year, signed a $40 million contract last year.

Nelson didn't mask his emotion when he got Webber. "The beauty of the trade was that we didn't have to lose any players," he told the AP. Many BYU fans were hoping Bradley would end up with Golden State. Instead, ironically, the Warriors obtained Utah's Josh Grant, who was a second-round selection of Denver, in a trade.

Shawn Bradley, BYU's former center, was chosen second in the NBA draft Wednesday by the Philadelphia 76ers.

Violent TV shows to carry warnings

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Starting this fall, shows on the four major television networks will carry parental warnings about violent content, but don't look for programs like "L.A. Law," "Cops" or "America's Most Wanted" to be among them.

Some people may consider them violent, but executives of ABC, CBS, NBC and Fox said Wednesday none of the currently aired series are brutal enough to regularly qualify for the voluntary advisories.

ABC's new police drama, "N.Y.P.D. Blue" will carry a warning each week, said Tom Murphy, chairman of Capital Cities-ABC. It's the only regular series on any network that will routinely be labeled for violence, the executives said at a news conference.

CBS has a new show, "Chuck Norris, Texas Ranger," said Howard Stringer, president of CBS Broadcast Group. "The Europeans are terrified we might take the karate out of it. I don't think we'll go that far. But we will look at it and we will make our individual judgments on that program."

The Big Four can take the lead with these warnings, but it can't control syndicators who sell shows to cable or independent stations, said the network executives, including Warren Littlefield, president of NBC Entertainment and George Vradenburg, executive vice president of Fox Television.

The networks are prepared for more criticism. They'll try out the system for two years and re-evaluate its success.

Besides starting a show with the advisory, they'll re-broadcast it during station breaks and give newspapers and magazines advance notice of which programs have violent content for TV listings.

The network executives said they'll also deal with the problem of violence in society in the storylines of their regular series, just as they have with drug and alcohol abuse, depiction of minorities and seat belt use.

Dramatized violence is the biggest challenge so far, said Jack Valentini, president of the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Where can you take it out and keep the suspense you want?" asked Valentini, who represents the Hollywood creators of TV programming.

Whether Americans want to admit it or not, they're drawn to violence. Advertisers know that and pay big money to be associated with dramatized gunplay. They don't, however, like it when shows carry warnings, said CBS' Stringer.

"Ain't nobody going to make money out of this," Valentini said.

Some people have called TV violence the leading cause of the real thing, though most researchers and members of Congress don't go their children to see?

House says no to abortion funding

WASHINGTON — The House voted Wednesday to retain the government's 16-year ban on federal money for poor women's abortions, giving abortion foes a victory in Congress' first big test vote of the year.

House members approved, 255-178, an amendment by Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., to ban all federal funds for abortion except to save the life of a mother or in cases of rape or incest.

Abortion-rights advocates in the House are counting on the Senate to soften the ban, perhaps by adding the exception: "when the health of the woman is at stake."

Anti-abortionists aren't likely to go for that, since courts have ruled that such language could be interpreted to include the emotional or mental health of the woman, taking in many more cases.

"The American people support a woman's right to choose," said Rep. John Porter, R-Ill. "But Americans also cannot be said to be pro-abortion.... They oppose the official sanction that federal funding [would give]."

Rep. Carrie Meek, D-Fla., said taxpayers may not want to fund abortion, "but they don't think twice about their insurance company premiums going for another policyholder's abortion."

Clinton tells Japan to open markets

WASHINGTON — Less than a week before the economic summit, President Clinton on Wednesday bluntly called on Japan to open its markets, on Germany to lower interest rates and on all of Europe to end a stalemate over farm subsidies.

"It's very hard for the United States alone to grow jobs without help from other nations," Clinton declared as he met with congressional leaders to discuss the July 7-9 meeting in Tokyo of the world's seven major industrialized democracies.

Leaders of both parties emerged from the White House meeting agreeing that the lame-duck status of Japanese Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa, and the relative weakness of other leaders, will make it hard to agree on a strong statement on economic growth.

Muslims seize Croat camp, prisoners

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Government forces claimed they captured a Croat military camp and seized prisoners Wednesday in an offensive that also gave them control of an important hydroelectric dam.

The success was offset by a combined Serb-Croat attack northwest of Sarajevo.

Government radio stated the Muslim-led government army took prisoners while capturing the Croats' camp, approximately 50 miles southwest of Sarajevo, near Mostar. Government forces also said they took control of a hydroelectric dam in Mostar.

The Croat-Muslim alliance began to buckle several months ago as the two sides started clashing over contested land.

Bosnian Croat spokesman Veso Vega acknowledged his side had been forced to cede a northern part of Mostar. More than five Croats died and about a dozen were wounded in the fighting, he said.

Life hard for unlucky lottery winner

OIL CITY, Pa. — Buddy Post's trip down Easy Street has been as bumpy as the carnival rides he once operated for $150 a week. He won $16.2 million in the state lottery in 1988, but now he's broke.

It gets worse. Police have charged his brother with trying to have him killed in an attempt to collect on his future prize payments.

"Everybody dreams of winning money, but nobody realizes the nightmares that come out of the woodworking, or the problems," Post said.

"Before I hit the lottery, I was more content," he said. "I had no pressure. I didn't have the worries. I had friends. I could go places and do things even though I didn't have money."

"I'm totally at a standstill," Post said. "There is nowhere to go. There is nothing I can do."

His 50-year-old brother, Jeffrey, was arrested Friday in Sarasota, Fla., and charged with plotting to kill Post and his sixth wife, Constance. A police informant told investigators he was hired by the brother to make the job look like a murder-suicide.

Last year, a judge ordered Post to give a third of the winnings, or about $5.3 million, to his friend and former landlord, Ann Karpik. She sued after the winning ticket was validated, saying she shared the ticket with Post.

Child-abuse center seeking volunteers

By PEGGY HOFFMAN
Universe Staff Writer

The Children's Justice Center is looking for volunteers interested in helping stop child abuse.

Volunteers can choose to work either directly with children or not, said Sheila Nielson, CJC coordinator. The agency is set up to help people who have some type of abuse within their families, and it provides support to families that need it.

"This is a child-friendly place," said Paul Curtis, CJC director. "It looks like a home, which is the atmosphere they want."

The CJC is the place where attorneys, social workers and others involved in the correction process all come to work with victims," Curtis said. "This way, they don't bounce the children from one place to another; we bring everyone here."

CJC needs volunteers who are not judgmental and can work with child-abuse victims and their families, Nielson said.

All volunteers go through 30 hours of training and are asked to commit to two hours a week for a six-month period of time. Both individuals and couples can apply for the volunteer positions, Curtis said.

Volunteers are given up to 10 families each to track. They make an initial contact to let the families know what resources are available and then help to get them into the services needed. The volunteers track and visit their clients continually.

Nielson said CJC also needs volunteers to help with office and secretarial work.

Citizens object to noise

2 companies defend explosives testing in Utah County

By TODD ANDERSEN
Universe Staff Writer

More than 40 citizens showed up at the Utah County Commission meeting Wednesday to complain about the noise made by explosives companies located in the county.

Representatives from two explosives companies—IRECO and Trojan—were on hand to explain their operations.

IRECO presented a scientific study which showed the effects of explosives testing on the west side of Utah Lake were not harmful.

Jay Anderson, a representative from IRECO, said "There is noise going around in the county. Some of it is ours. Most of it is some other source's."

IRECO did express a desire to work with the citizens in the county to solve the problem.

"We want to go the extra mile and be a good citizen," Anderson said. "We are undertaking some structural changes in the way we test. We are going to work on containing the blasts and shock waves."

—Jay Anderson, a representative from IRECO

Mark Jacob, a concerned citizen, suggested the explosives companies build detonation chambers to eliminate the noise problem.

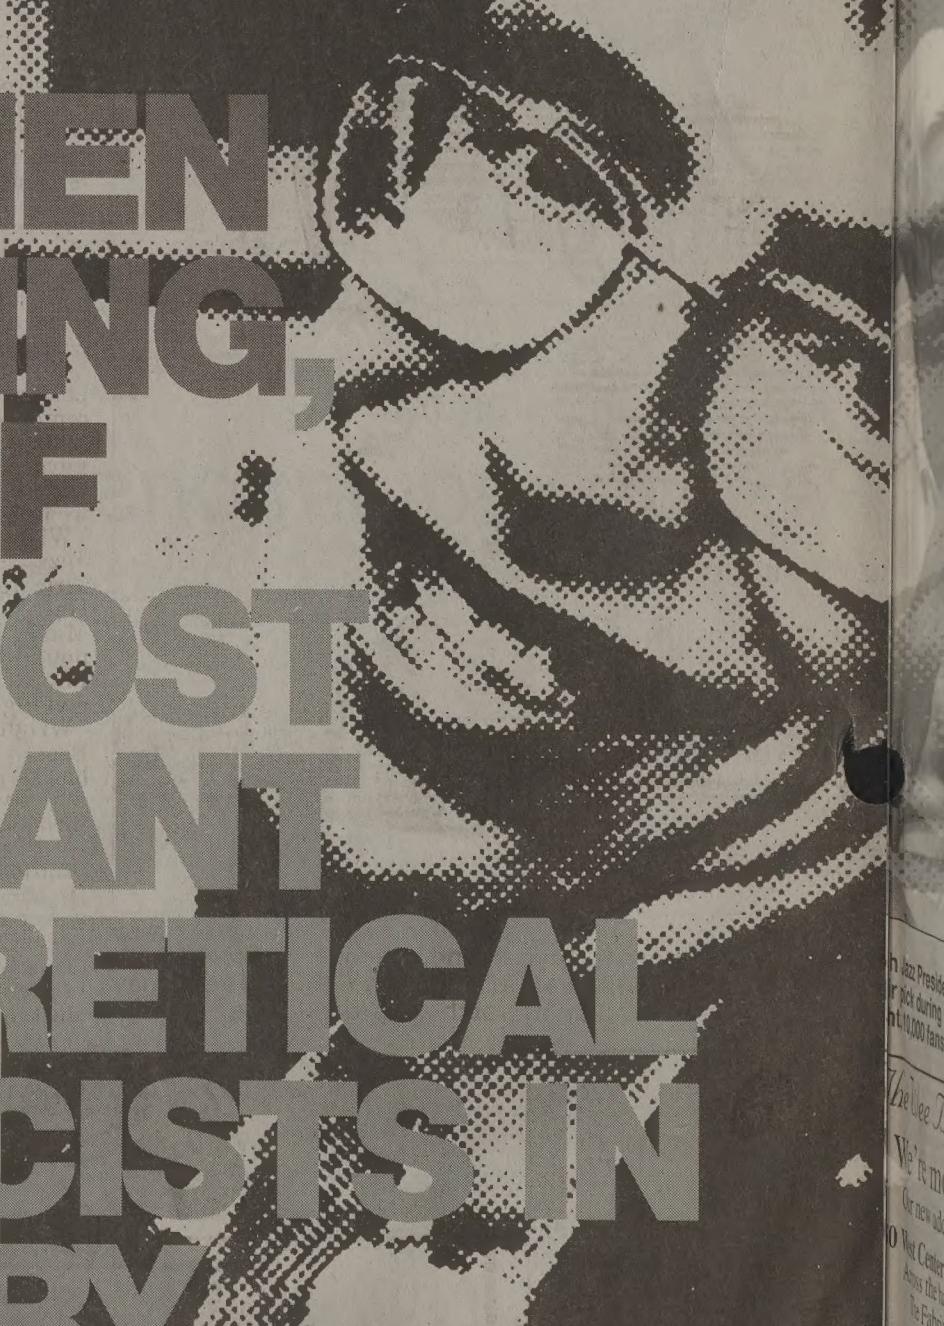

"It is not just a matter of buying (a detonation chamber) and building it," Anderson said. "There is a lot of technology that goes into constructing those. Then you must scrub the air that comes out, so that you're environmentally sound."

Anderson said IRECO is looking into the possibility of building a detonation chamber.

County Commissioner Gary R. Herbert said the noise issue was irrelevant and the purpose of the public hearing was to decide what to do with the ordinance governing mining and grazing zones where explosives companies' testing facilities are located.

On July 12, the county commission will render a decision on the ordinance, which could be to leave the ordinance as is, eliminate the audibility to store and test explosives in mining and grazing zones or make requirements for testing and storing explosives more strict.

MAJANIKI ISAKSON
Universe Sports Writer

Former BYU football player and graduate Blair Buswell has joined his love for sports with artistic talent in developing a career as a sports sculptor. On July 10, Buswell's sculptures will be displayed at the Pro Football Hall of Fame induction ceremony in Canton, Ohio.

This year the Hall of Fame signed Buswell to sculpt two of its inductees: Bill Walsh, former San Francisco 49ers coach, and Fouts, former quarterback for San Diego Chargers.

In eleven years working for Hall of Fame he has sculpted 22 athletes including such legends as O.J. Simpson, Terry Bradshaw, Ken Houston, Larry Csonka, Paul "Bear" Bryant and Bill Walker.

Buswell said the former players he coaches are great to work with. "It's lucky, because I'm dealing with guys who have super egos, but you've treated me well," Buswell said.

This year's assignment is special to Buswell because it was Walsh who got Buswell into the big leagues of sports sculpture. In 1982 at a football awards banquet, Buswell displayed the bronze sports sculptures he had done as a student and Walsh was the guest speaker at the banquet. He came up to Buswell afterwards and asked him to do a bust of himself and 49ers team owner Eddy DeBartolo, Jr.

After the sculptures "Championship Combo" were completed, Walsh flew Buswell out to Youngstown, Ohio to present the sculptures to DeBartolo. Conveniently, the Football Hall of Fame was located only a few miles away in Canton where Walsh set up an interview for Buswell with Hall of Fame officials. They liked his work and offered a contract to do a bust of one of the Football Hall of Fame inductees.

"Walsh is a real personable guy that I would love to have played for, someone my teammates (Todd Shell, Bill Ring, Steve Young, Tom Holm) liked playing for," Buswell said.

Joe Horrigan, curator-director of research information at the Pro Football Hall of Fame said, "Blair Buswell is a master at what he does. The busts he has sculpted for the Hall of Fame have won the praise of his subjects as well as the general viewing public. They are beautiful examples of his talent."

As part of the process, Buswell meets the players at the Pro Bowl in Hawaii in January for pictures and measurements. A few months later he meets with the athletes in their homes to make any final changes on the busts before they are bronzed.

On one occasion, Larry Csonka asked Buswell to wait until he had plastic surgery on his broken nose to sculpt him. Buswell, anticipating the challenge of sculpting Csonka's crooked nose, was disappointed with Csonka's request, but said, "I wasn't about to argue with Larry Csonka."

As a former player, Buswell says he has the extra insight needed to make his sculptures realistic and put his sculptures at ease.

Anu Kaljurand receives Academic All-America award

By GINGER DeHART
Universe Sports Writer

Anu Kaljurand, BYU All-American track heptathlete from Tallinn, Estonia, was selected to the 1993 GTE/CoSIDA Women's At-Large Academic All-America First Team.

Kaljurand will graduate from BYU in August with a cumulative grade point average of 3.81 in business management and Russian, and will begin MBA school this fall at BYU.

"At first it was hard to adjust because of the tempo here," she said, when asked about balancing athletics and school. "The United States is really fast-paced compared to Estonia.

"It's a matter of setting goals and reaching them. If you set it in your mind — you can do well. Everybody can do it."

While at BYU, Kaljurand has earned four All-America awards, and has broken several indoor and outdoor track records at BYU. She placed 17th in the heptathlon event at the 1992 Olympic Games in Barcelona.

After being the 1992 NCAA heptathlon champion, Kaljurand was expected to repeat the title, but injured a quadriceps muscle and withdrew from the 1993 NCAA track and field championships the day before the competition.

"We thought she was ready to do the best she's ever done," said BYU women's track coach Craig Poole.

"She went there hoping to compete," said BYU coach Patrick Shane. "Her leg just wouldn't let her do what she needed to do."

After a month, Kaljurand said she is running at 75 percent.

"Right now I feel like it was maybe for the better," she said. "My body needed a break—I've been pushing hard for 4 years in a row."

She plans to compete in the 1994 European Championships held in Helsinki, Finland, only 50 miles from Estonia.

Tee Thomas, 23, a senior majoring in humanism, and Heather Strange, 19, a junior majoring in music, place used CDs in plastic holders for sale. Selling or trading used CDs to pawn shops and music stores for cash is not as easy as it used to be. Owners are taking several precautions to prevent compact disc swipers from getting cash for stolen merchandise.

Music stores, pawn shops get tough with CD thieves

DAVID POPP
Universe Staff Writer

Local music stores and pawn shops are making it more difficult for compact disc thieves to get cash for their merchandise.

"Crandall Audio in Orem and Graywhale CD Exchange in Provo do not give cash for used CDs. We only give trades," said Scott Crandall, manager of Crandall Audio.

Pawn shops, on the other hand, do give cash for used CDs. However, it isn't as simple as just handing over cash.

"We're required by law, to anybody that we deal with, to ask for a picture ID with a birthdate indicating that the individual is over 18 years old," said Ray Johnson, co-owner of P&S Pawn in Provo.

When we must draw up a contract, have the person sign it, get a right thumb print of the individual and then check the merchandise against police reports of stolen property," Johnson said.

"The bad guys know not to come here. They know we're going to get caught," Johnson said. "The easiest way to get rid of stolen merchandise is through swap meets, garage sales or to take the merchandise out of the area. Those places don't have the paperwork that we have."

Local music stores take several precautions when trading in used CDs.

"If a hardrocker type comes in and wants to sell a Yanni CD, we know something is wrong," Graywhale Manager David Whitehead said.

Local pawn shops are concerned with their stereotypical image as a place for thieves to get rid of stolen merchandise. Pawn shop owners said their stores are viable ways to get quick cash for legal merchandise.

"Our main purpose is to help those that need the money," Johnson said.

"We have had lots of BYU students come in over the years to get the money to print dissertations and other things."

Many changes have helped discourage individuals from using pawn shops as the place to get cash "no questions asked." The Provo Police Department has a detective specifically assigned to pawn shops.

Reasons for route reversal this year are to shorten the parade one to two blocks and to aid television coverage, Warner said. The sun will face entrants and not shadow them on camera, he said. KBYU will provide live coverage of the parade.

Warner said parade entries have been limited to 110 this year.

"We think it will be more compact this year than it's ever been."

More monitors have been hired to keep the parade on schedule, he said.

The traditional Balloon Fest will fill Provo skies Friday, Saturday and Monday mornings. Balloonists are scheduled to launch between 6 and 7 a.m. at Freedom Field, 200 West, 1200 North.

More than 30 entries are expected to participate.

This year's Arts Festival, at the Utah County Government Complex, 100 East Center, is scheduled to include live entertainment, visual arts display, food booths and a children's art contest.

Other festival activities include a baby contest and Old Timers' Baseball game Thursday, Awards Gala Friday, Children's Parade and Stadium of Fire Saturday, picnic in the Park and accredited volleyball tournament at Kiwanis Park on Monday.

The festival will close Monday night with a display of fireworks from Provo High School's football field.

Buswell was a running back, an MVP and team co-captain for Ricks College's football team and redshirted a year for Utah State before his mission, but decided to transfer to BYU because of its sculpture program.

"It was more of an art decision than a football decision to come to BYU," Buswell said. Because Ricks and Utah State played more of a running game and BYU stuck more with the passing game, he knew he would not have as much playing time as a running back.

When Buswell's BYU football teammates went to the training table after practice, Buswell went to teach art lessons. Buswell sought to combine professional work with his studies as a secondary education/sculpture major. "My class projects were commissions. . . Half the battle is getting known, my goals were already set before I ever went to (BYU)," he said.

BYU houses some of Buswell's work including a sculpture of Danny Ainge, in the concourse of the Marriott Center, one of Jim McMahon, at Cougar Stadium and a bust of Ernest Wilkinson, in the J. Reuben Clark Law Building.

Y professor says Church becoming mainline religion

By MELISSA BEAN
Universe Staff Writer

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is steadily becoming a mainline religion in the United States as membership increases and tension between the Church and society decreases.

The Church is becoming more mainline because members keep up with the rest of the nation educationally, politically and socioeconomically, according to a 1991 article by Marie Cornwall, an associate professor of sociology who specializes in the sociology of Church members.

"Mormonism is the quintessential mainline religion of America because of the emphasis on education and the professionalization of the core adherence to Mormonism and because Mormonism is more accepted by the general population than it was before," Cornwall said.

Cornwall's article says "Mormons (both men and women) rank third in educational status, below Jews and Episcopalians."

"The core of Mormon membership is essentially professional," Cornwall said.

Member conservatism is on par with national political conservatism as well, according to Cornwall's article.

Fifty-one percent of Church members in the United States report they are members of the Republican Party, noted the article. This is opposed to 44 percent of Presbyterians and 41 percent of Episcopalians.

Cornwall's article reports Church members have shown "a phenomenal shift [in social status]: they have moved from the lowest-ranking religious group in the mid-1940s to the top of the middle rank."

"When asked to describe their social class, 48 percent of Church members reported they are in the middle or upper classes. By comparison, 37 percent of conservative Protestants and 28 percent of Jehovah's Witnesses reported upper or middle class membership," Cornwall said.

An April Time magazine article, "The Church Search," by Richard N. Ostling, reported that Church membership grew 133 percent between 1965 and 1989. In contrast, traditionally mainline churches such as the Episcopal, Methodist and Catholic churches face declines in membership and are losing control of "America's spiritual and cultural values," according to the article.

Cornwall notes that there may be 265 million members by 2080 and said there is a real challenge for mainline religions to keep their doctrinal integrity when other religions are changing to meet the demands of churchgoers.

High costs could mean rationed health care

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The cost of keeping one of Dr. Sandy Gibson's patients alive for a year is greater than the annual income of most American families.

He treats people whose kidneys have stopped functioning. Some hold full-time jobs; others are insane. All need dialysis. Without it they would die.

While that much is certain, says Gibson, who practices in Washington, "how it's improving their quality of life is questionable."

Some medical economists say such issues as the quality of life, and who will benefit most from expensive therapy, must be examined if the country is serious about cutting health care costs. But others say that will lead to rationing of health care and people will die needlessly.

"Today's terminal patient may be tomorrow's chronic patient," said Dr. Mervyn Silverman, president of the American Foundation for AIDS Research.

It's an ethical issue, as well as a financial one.

The nation's $900 billion health bill is rising $80 billion to $100 billion a year, and President Clinton has promised to try to contain those increases as part of his health care reform efforts.

Though the plan is not yet complete, administration officials say it won't resort to rationing as a way to control costs.

"We believe that we can make the overall system more efficient, and therefore it is unnecessary to rule out any necessary and appropriate services," said Judy Feder, deputy assistant secretary for planning and evaluation in the Department of Health and Human Services.

Right now, though, the financial incentive is to provide more services than many doctors believe are warranted, she said.

Dinner club easy on members' budgets

By JOSEPH B. SOUTH
Universe Staff Writer

How do 30 full-course meals for about $30 sound? Twelve BYU students who organized a dinner club pay about that much for dinner each month.

Pam Thomas, 21, a junior from Orem majoring in English and humanities, coordinates the club. She said benefits include affordable, nutritious meals, improved cooking skills and social interaction.

"You pay less than you would normally because you are saving the expense of instant meals," she said. "You also eat better because the person cooking provides a good, full meal, including a salad, bread and dessert."

Each of the 12 members of the club cooks once every two weeks on a rotating schedule. Members meet for dinner at 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Rich Henderson, 21, a sophomore from Tacoma, Wash., majoring in electrical engineering, said the club has improved his cooking skills.

"You learn how to cook good food because they won't put up with anything less," Henderson said.

Thomas said she is very selective when deciding who she allows into the group.

"I look for a responsible person," she said. "A person also needs a basic knowledge of cooking. If they are willing to learn, however, I'm willing to teach them."

Thomas said some members must learn how to follow a recipe or be taught to drain the grease from hamburger before using it.

"One inexperienced member of the group started to put raw hamburger into some spaghetti sauce she was making," Thomas said. "Luckily, someone saw her and stopped her."

Liesha Thomas, 20, a sophomore from Orem majoring in communica-

cations, said she enjoys the social aspect of the club.

"I especially liked it during reading days when you are stressed. It was nice to take a break from studying and sit down with your friends for a while," she said.

Liesha Thomas said the diversity of backgrounds among the students leads to a variety of meals. Great members have eaten authentic Indian, Hawaiian, Italian and Chinese food.

"It's interesting to try foods from other cultures, and you leave with a whole new collection of recipes," Thomas said.

EFY participants "Shout it out" in the Wilkinson Center Ballroom Wednesday night. 8000 teen-agers enrolled in this summer's annual Especially For Youth program.

1993 EFY enrollment reaches all-time high

By ERNEST GEIGENMILLER
Senior Reporter

Especially For Youth's 1993 attendance will hit a record-breaking 8,000 by the time all enrolled teen-agers pass through BYU's doors at summer's end.

Such expectations require the helping hands of nearly 200 counselors and guides to make sure the youth find their way to classes, dormitories and all festivities associated with the program, which is now in its 18th year.

The counselors supervise small groups through daily activities, but they are mostly required to spend evening and night hours with their assigned youth.

Todd Willey, an EFY program administrator, said the counselors received an extensive, all-day training session in March before being hired.

"It teaches them the duties and responsibilities of the program," he said. "It teaches the games and activities associated with EFY."

The counselors also help the teens keep an active, fun-filled schedule during their five-day stay at BYU. EFY planners like to keep it that way so they have little free time. One youth director called EFY an experience that "will change their lives."

"They don't have those normal distractions," said Ron Hills, a BYU youth programs director.

"They come here and leave their reputations at home. They're on equal footing with everyone."

This year's EFY theme is "Sharing the Light," with an additional focus on outdoor activities. For that reason alone, the counselors are expected to be energetic and outgoing.

"This is our biggest year ever," said Willey. "So it gets hectic."

Problems have been minimal, but Hill did say problems have existed with drinking, smoking and missing curfew. Under such circumstances, teens are immediately dismissed from the program and sent home.

The Universe spoke with several first-time EFYers who say they're glad they came.

"I came because a lot of girls in my church say it's something you have to do," said Ryan Lane, a 14-year-old from Aurora, Colo. "There have been a lot of good activities, especially anything with Troy Dunn. He's a lecture person, a teacher."

Lane said he's seen no one that didn't want to be at EFY.

"Everyone's been great," he said. "Everyone's right there to help."

Fourteen-year-old Amy Walter came because "everyone told me it was fun." Walter's favorite activities are the dances and inspirational meetings. She also plans to come back next year.

SOLVE YOUR CLASS SCHEDULING PROBLEMS THROUGH INDEPENDENT STUDY

YOUR SITUATION

- Class section is full
- Two classes you need are scheduled at the same time
- Class not offered this semester
- Prerequisite not completed
- Conflicting work schedule

YOUR ALTERNATIVES

- Take the course through Independent Study

When you find yourself in these situations, turn to the Department of Independent Study for an alternative. Independent Study offers you enrollment at any time, a full year to complete course work, and the flexibility to work at your own pace.

Get a free catalog at any advisement center, the ELWC information booth, the ASB, the Bookstore information booth, the Independent Study office in 206 Harman Building, or call 378-2868.
